Feedback - January 2019

Is 21st Century Technology a Threat to Natural Conception and Childbirth?

The EMWWH scheme, a new innovation, was established to empower and support all professional ethnic minority women in healthcare in Wales. The aim was to promote professional development by supporting educational events and facilitating mentorship, career advice, counselling, leadership, management skills, teaching and research.

This session was led by Professor . Siladitya Bhattacharya, MBBS, MD, FRCOG, Professor of Reproductive Medicine. He is the current Head of the School of Medicine at Cardiff University, and was formerly the Director of the Institute of Applied Health Sciences at the University of Aberdeen. His major research interest is in the field of reproductive epidemiology and the evaluation of interventions in reproductive medicine, particularly infertility.

Individual Comments

Very interesting presentation.

SC

I am an O&G trainee and so the content was very relevant to me. I really enjoyed the talk.

RL

Well organised, excellent teaching, excellent presentation, highly relevant. I think there should be a way forward to engage further with the wider non-clinical community.

JA

Interesting and thought provoking.

RM

Excellent and worthwhile attending.
