Interpretation of ABG and Indications for Non-Invasive Ventilation: For Medical Students and FY1 Doctors

Feedback - November 2021

Interpretation of ABG and Indications for Non-Invasive Ventilation: For Medical Students and FY1 Doctors

This two-part series aimed to discuss a number of common respiratory emergencies and their management. It examined their presentation and pathophysiology, as well as providing a discussion on how to treat them in an emergency clinical setting.

The second talk focused on the interpretation of an arterial blood gas (ABG) and the indications for non-invasive ventilation (NIV), as well as the practical aspects of utilising each of them. ABGs are often poorly understood at a medical student and junior doctor level, and this talk aimed to systematically discuss their interpretation to help demystify the ABG as a tool for understanding respiratory pathologies.

The session was amazing experience. Looking forward to join further sessions.

RN

King Hamad University Hospital, Al Sayh, Bahrain

The presentation was delivered excellently. Found it helpful coming from a country where ABG is not routinely done or interpreted.
